Graciously heartily, the door <sup>came</sup> ~~came~~ up and it revealed one of the most coolest places on earth. The machines ran. They played. They flew.
They were playing funky and jazzy. <sup>As</sup> the thing saw all of his home again. The lost thing saw his home but all ~~of~~ <sup>of</sup> I saw was an amazing, enchanting world. ✓ The thing <sup>my</sup> ~~my~~ eyes were incredible.

I chose to keep the lost thing in my parents shed so he didn't stay all alone. I'm not to make sure mum and dad don't find out but I don't know how he's going to sleep because it's as cold as snow in here so I'm making sure he doesn't get caught.

Whilst in the shed, the lost thing seemed to look hungry for the Christmas decorations.

I climbed the ladder stealthily as the thing opened up its mouth ready to get the coys thrown in his shiny mouth as it opened up. I felt really nervous but then I felt like the thing had smiled at me and I felt more happy and brave. He was very hungry though and also had my football shoes in his mouth. I let him have them though. The lost thing had eat lots but he gave me a look that felt like he wasn't full.

The Thief's Mirror Aoife Meehan Yr6 Tundra

The cobbled streets echo under the footsteps of shoppers and common thieves. Market Square, it's as large and bustling as it always is, the perfect place to steal. I nimbly place my fingers around a woman's purse, filching it into my pocket. As my eyes dart around the stalls, I can feel the butcher's ice-cold stare land on my back. I've been spotted.

"Oi! Thief!" he booms. My heart is racing as I pelt away from the shouts of the other stallholders. Scrambling up the nearest staircase, my cat, Jack, yowls from my shoulder speaking words only I can hear,

"You've never been caught in the market before, it's the best location and easy to steal there... Marley won't be pleased."

"Don't you think I know that already? This will be my second warning this week! This wallet had better be worth it." I mutter, my cheeks turning pink, thinking of how Marley, the top thief, had told me off earlier that week for coming back with only a pound coin. I'm normally my best at the market square. I can still hear the loud, menacing shouts of the shopkeepers as I'd dodged left and right. Thankfully the hideout's near -- but I'm dreading the look on the other thieves' faces when I return almost empty-handed.

Hello Aoife,

This was such a sweet, sweet story! I loved your writing style. It was descriptive, and you excel at 'show, don't tell'.

I've made some suggestions in the comments, which I hope you'll find useful.

Your writing is excellent, and I can see you growing up to be a most marvelous writer. Don't ever stop!

Warm wishes,

Ramya

How has London evolved over time?

24.04.24

1. Compare London across the three maps and describe what has changed.

Sentence stems	Key vocabulary
In 1270CE...	The River Thames	connected
Medieval London had...	religion	parishes
The city was...	bridges	schools
By 1828CE...	transport	port
The city had...	north / south	expanded
However, it was still...	farmland	boroughs
Now, London is...	roads	densely populated
Over time, it has...	evolved	urban

2. Explain how some key events have led to these changes over time.

In 1270CE London looked smaller than it does now. You could tell that religion was an important because of how many churches there were.

In 1828CE, London looked like it had got bigger. The map has lots of lines on it. It almost doubled its size.

Now 2024, London looks massive and it's more clear where different locations are because it's made on a computer.

The biggest thing of London changed London because it built it and it a build.
